Hi Freddie,

I have received the following questions from a resident. Are you able to provide a response?

- 1. Firstly I understand from the report which deals with construction traffic that the build time is around 9 months. Can you let me know how much of this 9 months of construction time is allocated to piling activity.*
- 2. There is a considerable amount of documentation about the piling method to be used, and I understand that there will be 3 piling rigs on site of which 2 will be used at once in order to pile the 3,310 piles into the ground. I cannot find any information about how many blows will be required to insert each pile to the required depth. I presume this information is available from the developer, understanding that the calculations will be different for each of the types of piles being used. I also cannot find any information about the time during each day that the developer will be piling, or the hours of piling operation.*
- 3. I cannot find any data on the level of decibel emission from the piling activity, and given the context, it would be helpful and appropriate to have that information - and to take the 'interaction effect' of two piling rigs working at once into consideration so that there is the appropriate level of transparency for residents.*

Thank you.

Kind Regards

Claire Westwood
